

Renee Zellweger: Experts Believe She Had Plastic Surgery

Did she or didn't she? Fans were asking the question after new photos surfaced of Renee on Nov. 2 looking a bit different. We spoke to numerous plastic surgeons to get their expert opinions on whether she had work done!

Renee Zellweger looked fresh-faced and amazing at a screening of the movie Long Shot: The Kevin Laue Story on Nov. 2 in Burbank, Calif. But is the 44-year-old gracefully aging or is she getting some help from a dermatologist?

HollywoodLife.com spoke to four plastic surgeons EXCLUSIVELY to bring you the truth!

Renee Zellweger's Face — Experts Speak About Plastic Surgery

Dr. Brian Glatt, Board Certified Plastic Surgeon in Morristown, NJ, says it doesn't look like Renee had a nose job, but it does appear she got a chin implant:

"Weight loss can even make a person's nose appear slimmer as Ms. Zellweger's does post weight-loss. It does not appear as if she has had rhinoplasty. While weight loss can certainly eliminate the appearance of a double chin, in Renee's case, the chin is actually elongated, which is not something that can be attributed to weight loss. Although I have not treated Ms. Zellweger it is pretty safe to say based on this photo that she has had a chin implant. The result is attractive without giving the jawline a look that is too masculine. The added length to her face seems to make the rest of her features "pop" giving her face a look that is overall quite striking.

Renee has always had small eyes. By losing volume in her cheeks through weight loss, it makes her eyes more outstanding. Nothing in the shape or angle of her eyes has changed and nor has her brow position. Aside from the likely chin implant and the continued use of botox (since the "before" pictures of Renee show her forehead wrinkle free), the rest of the facial changes appear to be weight loss related."
